Rebecca

By Belle Strohner

The fire in the little fireplace of the dining room in the Brown home crackled merrily, for outside the day was bleak and chilly, as many December days are. Rebecca sat before the fire; her head in her hands, her elbows on her knees. On her usually happy face was a frown, a very much like anger.

Her mother came from the kitchen and seeing the puzzled look on Rebecca's face, asked: "What is it, Rebecca? You don't look happy."

"I am not happy," said Rebecca, "I am not happy at all. I am all because of my mother's old name. Mother why did you ever give me such a name? The old young folks persist in calling me 'Becky'."

Her mother took a chair beside her and said: "I named you for one of my dearest friends, the sweetest old lady, I believe, that I have ever met."

Neither spoke, so Mrs. Brown went back to the kitchen. Soon she came back bringing a jar of hot broth.

"Wouldn't you like to take this to Auntie Jenkins for her dinner? She is very fond of it and perhaps the walk may do you good."

Rebecca was willing to go for all the young folks loved Auntie Jenkins. As she walked down the hill to the little bird kept singing. It seemed to Rebecca that it said, "Becky, Becky," while in reality it said "Chick-a-dee, Chick-a-dee."

Auntie Jenkins was an old lady, a little stooped and small, but the sweetest face, for she always had a smile for everyone. She lived alone in a neat little cottage, her husband being dead, but during vacations her nephew, Dick Jenkins, and his wife, Mrs. Jenkins, came to her, so she got along quite nicely. She was old, yet very modern. Pretty dresses at her windows and fancy work here and there. She owned the land stretching from her home to the river and a beautiful grove of pine trees on her lot.

Rebecca and Dick had spent many happy hours here and fishing in the river. Auntie Jenkins was so kind to her that she could not help but keep her doors locked and Rebecca walked right in. Turning from her work, the old lady saw her.

"Oh," she said, "I am so glad to see you. A jar of broth is Rebecca gave her the thought of your mother is. But sit down and I will put a stick in the stove, then I want you to tell me all the news."

So Rebecca told her all she could think of, many with her head bowed as she said, "Tell me, dear, what has gone wrong?"

Rebecca was on the verge of crying, but she held back her tears and said, "Auntie Jenkins, my mother ever called me such a horrid old fashioned name, I can't see, for a very dear friend she said, but it makes me angry every time any of my friends call me 'Becky'."

A mischievous twinkle shone in Auntie Jenkins' old eyes as she said, "Now, let me tell you a story: Once upon a time, I was a girl like you, and of course you know my name is really Rebecca, although few people call me that. Most of my folks call me 'Becky' and I like it, but I never knew that before," said Rebecca, "Mother always calls you Auntie Jenkins."

"I know she does," replied the old lady, "but you are interrupting my story."

"Well, go on," said Rebecca, "I promise not to stop you again," and she managed to squeeze a smile.

"Well," Auntie Jenkins went on, "I was an only child and I had to go to parties and such things alone. One night I went to a party and I was just like you, it made me boil when the young folks called me 'Becky'. When the party was over and I was starting for home, a young man came up and asked if I could walk home with me. Of course this was Mr. Jenkins and of course I said 'Yes'. As we were walking along, something came up and he called me 'Becky'. I flew right at him and told him not to call me that. He asked me why not."

"All the young folks like it, they think it is fine," he said.

"Well, I cooled off a little and said, 'I thought they were making fun of me.'"

"Why, the idea," he said, "you would not expect your friends to make fun of you, would you? Least of all, me?"

Before he finished talking I felt him of foolish and ashamed. "Now, let me tell you a story: Once upon a time, I was a girl like you, and of course you know my name is really Rebecca, although few people call me that. Most of my folks call me 'Becky' and I like it, but I never knew that before," said Rebecca, "Mother always calls you Auntie Jenkins."

"I know she does," replied the old lady, "but you are interrupting my story."

"Well, go on," said Rebecca, "I promise not to stop you again," and she managed to squeeze a smile.

"Well," Auntie Jenkins went on, "I was an only child and I had to go to parties and such things alone. One night I went to a party and I was just like you, it made me boil when the young folks called me 'Becky'. When the party was over and I was starting for home, a young man came up and asked if I could walk home with me. Of course this was Mr. Jenkins and of course I said 'Yes'. ## Our Western Trip

Story of the Travels of Mrs. Mabel J. Jolson and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lombard to Bolster's Mills, in Summer of 1933.

Chapter I

On the bright morning of the 1st of September, we left our home in South Paris, Me., and went by Spurr's road to the back road to Auburn, Maine, as far as Mercer, where we had dinner with friends, and then went through Bingham and to the campsite just 182 miles from home. Here we set up our tent and supper and eating place, and the swarms of mosquitoes came in.

As we expected to have a very hot day, we drove right on, but we found the Canadian road to be a very good one. We found we had to go back to the river to get a canoe. After entering the river, we found a great deal of up hill. The remainder of the trip was a very good one. We found a very good canoe and a very good guide. It was discovered last week that the Bargain Shop, formerly conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Rosenbloom, but which has been closed for some time, had been entered by thieves and it was difficult to tell just how much had been taken.

Fortunately the buildings were not burned as matches were found on the floor and evidently the marauders had twisted old papers and used for a torch.

Miss Eva Brett of Maple Ridge is employed at H. Oscar Kneeland's. Mrs. Kneeland is still very poorly.

We feel that it will interest you personally, also your readers, to know what the Red Cross in Harrison has accomplished and what its problems are. While we feel that we have accomplished much, we are fully aware that our work must be continued vigorously.

During the past year the following merchandise has been distributed: 30 union suits, 85 pairs hose, 8 pairs men's and boys' socks, 20 pairs women's, 13 pairs percale, 137 yards flannel, fruit, nuts and candy for the shut-in boxes.

A month's rent was paid, also for the services of a woman to act as nurse. Four or five barrels of corn given of a patriotic nature, the next meeting will be children's night.

Nothing was distributed. The Red Cross also assisted the town in collecting bedding, clothing and furniture for local fire victims. From headquarters in Portland we received quantities of bedding, clothing, also food and 127 bags of flour, about half being the 49 lb. bag, were given out.

It is possible that the calls upon us will increase this winter and in this connection we are urging that public interest among our townpeople will be maintained.

In what we believe an important and necessary work. The forthcoming roll call will of course provide an opportunity for the public to express its continued faith in the American Red Cross. The membership fee is one dollar, fifty cents remaining in town and fifty cents going to National Headquarters.
